

MEDIEVAL MILITARY UNITS

Medieval Military Units is a 5e supplement that presents soldiers, officers, cavalry, siege crews, and naval personnel as functional NPCs operating within a wartime setting. Instead of treating “soldiers” as a single repeated guard stat block, this book divides military forces into distinct battlefield roles that reflect how armies actually function during conflict.

The intent of this product is grounded wartime interaction — not mass combat resolution. These stat blocks are designed for standard 5e encounters where characters negotiate with captains, duel knights, infiltrate siege camps, defend walls, escort supply lines, or navigate military politics. They are not a wargame system, do not require formation tracking, and do not introduce layered morale mechanics.

Infantry hold gates and chokepoints. Bowmen control sightlines and battlements. Cavalry flank and pursue. Siege crews operate engines that threaten structures rather than abstract units. Naval forces represent boarding parties and wartime sailors without introducing a naval combat subsystem. Officers provide battlefield coordination through simple, encounter-scale leadership abilities.

Allegiance, geography, and political context are intentionally undefined. These units can represent a royal host, a border garrison, a crusading army, a mercenary company, a rebellious province, or a coastal war fleet. Whether the war is just, corrupt, collapsing, or triumphant is left entirely in the GM's hands.
