

D6++ Vehicles

These vehicles are designed for use in any D6++ genre and can easily be adapted to other game systems.

The attributes are:

- (S) Strength – vehicle's power
- (A) Agility – vehicle's handling and maneuverability
- (Q) Quickness – vehicle's raw speed
- (H) Health – vehicle's ability to resist damage
- (D) Driver's Skill – dice from the driver's skill

Cars

Convertible

A stylish car with the roof down, made for drive, not want to be seen. Convertibles offer decent speed and agility, but the open design makes passengers more exposed. NPCs in convertibles are flashy types—gangsters showing off, celebrities enjoying the sun, or thrill-seekers who care more about fun than safety.

Hatchback

A simple, practical car seen in suburban driveways and campus parking lots. It's cheap, easy to maneuver, and never draws attention. Nobody brags about owning one, but it gets from A to B with stubborn reliability. NPCs in hatchbacks are students, commuters, or the inconspicuous types who value blending in.

Luxury Sedan

Polished chrome, tinted windows, and leather interiors that smell like money. Luxury sedans carry executives, politicians, or high-ranking mob bosses. It signals authority and wealth without the flash of a sports car—the kind of ride where the real danger isn't the vehicle, but the people inside.

Muscle Car

A throaty engine, wide stance, and the smell of burning rubber. Muscle cars are all about raw power and straight-line acceleration. NPC drivers are hotheads, racers, or gang enforcers with something to prove. They're less refined than sports cars but terrifying when charging down a straightaway.

Sedan

The most common car on the road. Comfortable, four-door comfort with room for a family or two gangsters in the back seat. Sedans are forgettable in appearance but plentiful — perfect for NPCs you don't want players to notice until it's late.

Sports Car

All roar, speed, and speed. Sports cars are rolling egos, painted in neon or camouflaged. NPCs driving them are thrill-seeking playboys, crime bosses with something to prove, or rich kids who love the attention. They're status symbols — and trouble magnets.

Vortex Supercar

A low, angular beast of a machine, the Vortex Supercar hugs the asphalt with predatory intent. Its engine roars like a jet turbine, and its bodywork glitters in exotic paint jobs that scream health and power. Built for speed and intimidation, it slices through traffic with reckless grace, daring anyone to keep up.

Utility & Heavy

Delivery Van

Boxy, rattling, and suspiciously full of packages, PCs in delivery vans might be real drivers bringing pizza, or a smuggler hiding contraband under cardboard boxes. These vehicles are anonymous, utilitarian, and everywhere — perfect for ambushes or surveillance.

Dump Truck

Massive and utilitarian, dump trucks are construction-site workhorses. They move gravel, dirt, or rubble, and their sheer size makes them dangerous obstacles on city streets. NPCs driving them are contractors, foremen, or shady operators moving more than just stone in a truck.

Garbage Truck

Slow, dirty, and unstoppable. Garbage trucks are reinforced to handle tons of waste, and they move with ponderous strength. PCs driving them are sanitation workers, but in RPGs they're often fronts for smugglers, thieves, or corpses hidden among the trash.

Pickup Truck

A rugged workhorse with mud on its tires and tools in the bed. Found on farms, job sites, or tailgates outside football games. Drivers are working-class NPCs or survivalists with gear strapped down and the grit to use it. Loud, dependable, and capable of smashing through a fence if needed.

Specialized: Ram

Semi-Truck

A thundering behemoth of the highway. Semi-trucks carry goods across the country, but they can also serve as rolling walls in chases or deadly battering rams. NPC drivers are long-haul truckers, puzzled road veterans, or know every diner and every mile marker.

Specialized: Ram

SUV

Large, strong, and popular with families and off-roaders alike. SUVs carry groups, weapons, or gear across rough ground. They protect safety and intimidation — NPCs in SUVs are soccer parents, federal agents, or mercs who like the extra room.

Tow Truck

Heavy, loud, and built to haul. Tow trucks can drag stalled cars, block roads, or clear wreckage. NPC drivers are mechanics, opportunists, or underworld fixers making money on desperate calls. They're slow, but in a chase, nothing blocks the road like a tow truck sideways across the lane.

Specialty

Hearse

Long, heavy, and unmistakable, hearses carry more than just coffins. Often seen in processions, they also double as getaway cars or eccentric rides for NPCs with a flair for the dramatic. Their slow, deliberate pace adds gravitas—and menace—wherever they appear.

Motorhome

Part home, part vehicle, part mystery, motorhomes hide drifters, refugees, or entire criminal crews who need mobility. They're slow but self-contained, stuffed with supplies and secrets. NPCs inside might be innocent tourists — or fugitives using it as a mobile base.

Taxi

Painted in bright yellow or fitted with a rideshare sticker, taxis are everywhere in cities. They're durable sedans driven hard for hours each day. NPC drivers are chatty, streetwise, and often know more about what's happening in the city than the cops do. Perfect for informants or quick getaways.

Emergency & Security

Ambulance

Sirens, flashing red lights, and a sense of urgency — ambulance crews ferry the wounded — or cover for a crew's fast escape. Ambulances include paramedics doing their duty on criminals exploiting the disguise. Where there's an ambulance, someone's hurt... or about to be.

S	A	Q	H

Specialized: Evade

Armored Truck

Rolling banks on wheels. NPCs inside are guards, ex-military, or the targets of heists. Armored trucks are fortresses that can plow through gunfire but are prime marks for ambitious criminals. Wherever one appears, danger follows.

10D	2D	2D	10D

Specialized: Keep Control

Fire Truck

Huge, loud, and impossible to ignore. NPCs here are firefighters racing to save lives — or crews using the bulk of the vehicle to push through chaos. The water cannons and ladders make it as versatile for rescues as it is for blockades.

Specialized: Obstruct

Police Cruiser

A black-and-white symbol of authority with lights flashing and sirens wailing. NPCs driving them are patrol officers, detectives, or imposters in stolen units. Police cruisers are fast, durable, and instantly recognizable — fear and respect rolled on four wheels.
